

The NJ 'Do not call' list has been the only positive law coming from this state in a very long time with the best interests of its residents in mind. Telemarketers no longer call at any hour during weekdays and weekends. If I wanted a business to call me because of a previous business relationship then they would have my number because it comes from me directly and not from a telemarket list. If I want to donate to a charity, then I will contact them directly by phone or mail. Telemarket people are annoying and disruptive to my quiet time at home. These individuals are not those who have done business with me or family members at any time in the past. The FCC should not try to change any part of NJ's 'Do not call' law because it protects it's residents from those with unethical business tactics and unwelcomed telephone solicitors. Thank you
